

APRIL
2017

Greetings!

Spring is in the air with many new events happening at the Center.

Art! Music! Workshops! Theater!

And to showcase all these we have a new website! Macayla Willis has been creating a new user-friendly format. There may be a few bugs and it is still a work in process. Please check it out; let us know what works for you, and what still needs improvement.

When you come to the gallery to see George Olson's Watercolors from the Tallgrass Prairie, be sure to visit the studio with prints from the National Arts Honor Society. We are so proud of the artwork created by the young people in the area.

Tune into KWQC, Paula Sands Live at 3:00 pm on Wednesday, March 29 or visit the web at this address to see our segment of the show (<http://www.kwqc.com/psl>). I will be promoting our Youth Arts Festival coming up on April 9th.

Andy Steil, of Birdhouse72, tested out his new cameras at your last Song Writers Showcase on March 16th with Medicinal Purposes and Robyn and Ted. Here's the YouTube video, in three parts. We hope to have more recordings of our performances in the future.

We bid a fond farewell to one of our studio artists, MarieMcDonough. Our mission is for the studios to be used as art business incubators, and that's exactly what has happened. Marie has moved to a much larger studio, which will allow space for all the woodworking tools she needs. She will still exhibit her work with us now and then and will be teaching a beginner's wood carving workshop here on April 22 and 23. Stop by to see her at her new studio on Main Street in Stockton.

We wish you a beautiful art-filled April!

Volunteer of the Month - Laura Scoles

Walking into Laura Scoles' studio, you immediately know that this is an artist who loves design, color, and pattern. A nearly finished, quilted runner, made up of batiked pieces lies on a table; a "zentangle" and a pile of cards decorated with folded paper designs are on a desk.

The ingredients of multiple crafts are neatly organized throughout the room. Laura loves crafts, and she especially loves working with paper. If you've been in the Center for the Arts' gift shop, you have undoubtedly seen some of her original cards.

Since she was a small child, Laura has been drawing, painting, and creating art in many different forms. She says she loves trying out new media and new techniques. As she laughingly admits, she'd like to "try everything!"

Laura carries this ebullience over to the Art Center, where she volunteers in many different capacities. She bakes and/or serves food for both the Center's openings and the Songwriters' Workshops. She works in the library, organizing the books. She has taught a couple of workshops, including one on origami with Pat Lehnhardt, and she is currently helping with the preparations for the Youth Arts Festival. She even paints the pedestals used in the galleries!

When Laura talks about the Center for the Arts, she lights up with enthusiasm. "I love it!" she says. "It's such a warm, feel-good place, and everyone there is so excited about the arts. It's a great place to meet interesting people."

"Warm," "excited," and "interesting"-- all words that fit Laura herself, a volunteer who certainly helps make the Center the "feel-good" place that it is.
